

eProposal Guide

Before you apply:

1. Are you a PI-eligible researcher at Texas A&M? If not, you are not eligible for this particular program. Please see other writing programs offered by the Division.
2. Did you attend one of the required seminars by GWSW? For NSF applicants these were:

Write Winning NIH and NSF Grant Proposals seminar (Core and NSF-Focus sections) on Sep. 21-22, 2017

For NIH applicants these were:

Write Winning NIH and NSF Grant Proposals seminar on Sep. 21, 2017 (Core and NIH-Focus sections) or Write Winning NIH Grant Proposals seminar on Sep. 22, 2016

Before you log in to eProposal:

1. Look through the following pages to familiarize yourself with the eProposal application.
2. Know your UIN or have it available in order to access eProposal.
3. Prepare a short descriptive title of the proposal you plan to work on during the writing program. You will need to enter this at the beginning of the application.
4. Contact three (3) reviewers who agree to serve as members of your Pre-Submission Review Committee. They will review your proposal for scientific and technical merit after receipt of your final critique from GWSW. You will need to supply their names and institutions in your application. NOTE: This is not a formal ad hoc committee that has to meet as a group; it's basically three reviewers with whom you work individually to discuss the scientific and technical merits of your proposal. You may want to take what you hear from one and discuss it with another, but this is really up to you.
5. Have a PDF copy of your current biographical sketch available to be uploaded during the application process.
6. Talk to your department head and/or college research dean to confirm their approval of your application and the amount of funds they will contribute toward the writing program fee. That total must add up to $1,600. The Division will pay the remainder of the fee, $2,400.
